[Vital reactivity of foot and ankle flexion and extension movements in persons living at high altitudes]. This work was designed to study the reactivity of the lower limb muscles of persons living at high altitudes by using a new method. The method consists in testing the reflex activity of the muscles during natural reflex movements of the ankle and foot in sitting position (ankle dorsiflexion and foot extension) and standing position (ankle plantarflexion and foot eversion). Among several reflexes in the passive test, the reflex activity of the soleus muscle by the stretch reflex mechanism (SR) was selected and the following parameters were measured: the rise time of the electromyogram, the motor response time (MRT), and the rise time of the motor potential (MRP). The reflex activity was assessed in 20 men aged 20-45 years, living at high altitudes. The results of the examination of the reflex reactivity of the lower limb muscles indicate that the reflex activity was enhanced in subjects of the highest age group in standing position. The enhanced reflex activity of the muscles during the movements of the lower limb in the subjects of the highest age group was probably a result of a degree of adaptivity to life conditions at high altitudes.
